

1500 p.s.i.

Due to his chronic myopia, Frank misread the number on the sidewall of his bike's front tire and pumped 1,500 psi of air into it. Miraculously, the tire didn't burst. In fact, passers-by commented favorably on the vehicle's altered look, a look that would eventually spur a minor renaissance in the design of two-wheeled transportation. Frank, however, missed the renaissance, because after he fell off his wobbly bicycle for the 47th time, he summarily ditched it.