

Sure, blame it on Lola.

Panjib Floss was chief buyer for Dinklaker International, the biggest import-export business in all of Mumbai. Panjib made his business decisions only when he was certain of a product's marketability – either that or when his weasel, Lola, scratched out the name of a commodity in her sandbox. The company rewarded him handsomely for his decisions ... until the day that he purchased 100,000 sets of dentures from Argentina. Sure, he got them at a great price, but due to a misinterpretation of weasel calligraphy, they were all Brobdingnagian in scale. Ergo Panjib, currently reassigned to an assistant stock clerking position, would be happy to entertain your offer on the lot. Make that more than happy.
