

Bob

Enid's taxidermy skills were evident from a young age. In her ninth grade biology class, she had to dissect a frog. Enid did so expertly – better than any of her classmates – but then she also figured out how to put it back together again. Later, she taught herself how to re-assemble birds, snakes, fish, small animals, and eventually large animals. Her crowning achievement, however, was Bob, her first husband. Seated on his favorite chair, his eyes seeming to follow your every move, Bob added a creepy realism to the dining room, an area that Enid's house guests steadfastly avoided.
