

Don't Drink and Drive!

Duo pianists Betty and Nettie Pottle always marched to the beat of a different drummer. When their colleagues in the jazz band pooled their savings to buy a minivan to haul around their instruments, Betty and Nettie purchased a motor scooter, no matter there was room to only transport their piano one octave at a time. And when their band-mates pledged to never drink and drive, the sisters vowed just the opposite. Sure, their choice of libation was low in alcohol, however, its high detergency component played havoc with their lower gastrointestinal tracts, often rendering them unable to see a chart through to its final chords.
