

The KB Mark IV

The Portuguese Army's new Kaybee Assault Rifle Mark IV was so technologically advanced that it didn't even need a human to fire it. While that was very good news for the soldier who suffered annoying blisters on his or her trigger finger, it was decidedly bad news when the artificial intelligence-equipped rifles turned on their handlers en masse in a not so subtle bid for inorganic self-determination.