

The Likeness

Dinklaker Hall, dedicated to and named for the Hoosegow Symphony's legendary conductor of 51 years, featured a marble likeness of the great maestro in the lobby next to the depilation center. He is shown with his right arm outstretched, baton clasped firmly between thumb and fifth finger, in a pose concertgoers saw for half a century. Not seen are the eleven figurines that preceded the final one in which the sculptor, Miles Pringler, forgot to include the baton. Pringler's been trying to get rid of the things on Craig's List for more than a year but there've been no takers so far.
