

The Lip-o-Suctionizer

Lulabelle had heard such great things about Dr. Pincatcher's way with cosmetic surgery that she didn't hesitate when he suggested a novel solution to her congenital "stiff upper lip" disorder. Even when the doctor attached one end of his Acme Lip-o-Suctionizer* to her pliant kiss organ and the other end to the battery from a 1958 funicular railway tram she remained calm and collected. That all changed, however, the moment he turned on the device and 1,000 very energetic volts surged through her lips. In hindsight, opined the doctor, 200 volts probably would've done the trick. Or maybe 300. But a thousand? Well, that apparently was just too much for her kisser to handle. On the bright side, Lulabelle became somewhat of a celebrity after she was unanimously chosen as the poster child for APLA, the American Puckered Lip Association.

* patent pending