

Lorna and Leo

Large animal dental hygienist Lorna Dinklaker was forever urging her clients to floss properly, but their lack of opposable thumbs made it difficult for them to even hold a toothbrush. So she was resigned to do it for them at their annual check-ups, no matter their halitosis was so overpowering—after a diet made up primarily of carrion, yours would be, too—she sometimes fainted at the most inopportune times. Leo T. Lion, for instance, once made her pay for her inattention with her favorite nostril.
