Ol' Squinty

According to reliable legend, Albrecht Gessler –a disagreeable little bureaucrat in Altdorf, Switzerland – demanded that William Tell shoot an apple off of the head of his son. (That's William's son, not Albrecht's.) Without breaking a sweat, Tell split the apple with a bolt from his trusty crossbow, Cecile. Sure, Tell, a celebrated marksman, was known for his unerring accuracy. But *un*known to the public were the dozens of his assistants who, over the years, made the ultimate sacrifice as Ol' Squinty ever so slowly improved his aim.