

The Busboy

Whenever Chef Pringler was depressed – which, regrettably, was often in the days following his rather nasty divorce – the quality of La Belette Puante’s cuisine suffered. As did busboy George Appleby, who the patrons of the restaurant pelted with the bad food to show their displeasure. To protect himself, George replaced his cotton apron with a reinforced metal one. But that action merely provoked the choleric trenchermen, who then assailed him with the eatery’s cutlery. Because Management didn’t intervene, George took matters into his own hands and fought back with a Heckler and Koch P30. He was such a good shot that the number of clientele fell precipitously. But what was lost in food revenue was quickly made up by the pricey admission fee hoards of bloodlust-starved people eagerly paid to watch George subdue his attackers ... at least until that tragic night when a curious Chef Pringler crept out from the kitchen and was caught in the crossfire.