

The Cause of Trismus Revealed

Trismus, or lockjaw, refers to a reduced opening of the human jaws caused by a spasm of the muscles of mastication, or, more often, by trying to swallow a small camera. Temporary trismus (trismus temporaneo) is more common than permanent trismus (trismus permanente), and, while painful and embarrassing, can often be alleviated by removing the invasive device from one's mouth.