

Wartgirl

“We’d better do something about this,” said the doctor, referring to a tiny wart he spotted on the tip of Vera’s nose during her annual check-up. But because it was so tiny, Vera opted to ignore it and hope it would go away. At the next annual physical, both Vera and her wart were back. And while Vera was about the same size, the growth was a little bigger. Again the doctor suggested it be removed, and again Vera declined, reasoning it wasn’t that much bigger. During the following year, however, the wart grew like gangbusters. The doctor pleaded with Vera to have the wart-ectomy. But Ripley’s Believe It Or Not Museum in Florida was more persuasive by almost $5,000. And that’s where you can see Wartgirl, seven days a week, noon to 8 p.m. For an additional 50¢, you can even touch her now famous nasal addendum.
